

Why hospitals need Accreditation?

With the advent of medical insurance and medical tourism, the need for providing quality care has increased manifold. Hospitals are now competing with each other to offer the best possible care to their patients. Since accreditation is given only to hospitals following certain basic standards these hospitals are definitely capable of providing the best possible care. The Accreditation helps hospitals to benchmark with International quality providing world-class quality services to its patients.

The National Accreditation Board for Hospitals and Health Care Providers (NABH) advocates a very practical approach to the accreditation process, most suitable for Indian hospitals to adhere to. Considering that almost 90% of hospitals are with beds less than 100, the (NABH) a constituent board of Quality Council of India (QCI) has recently launched accreditation standards for Small Health Care Organisations (SHCO) such as Nursing Homes and Single Speciality hospitals.
